Hi Adrian

Yes, if you are going to set the 60mm off the wall I would go for the M12 version and would still be tempted to run a long nut up under the eye to limit bending on the outside ones. So an M12 x 200mm eye bolt. We may also have some threaded hilti sockets if you wanted to make these removable or you could use a short eyebolt coupling nut and threaded bar. We could supply these for £45 plus postage for 3 sets or you can probably pick them up locally.

Regards

Paul

Hi Paul

Hope all starting off ok in the UK.

The client is looking at this project again. They are asking for the 2T webbing with 60 mph rating .

They would like the fixings attached to the house now as they intend to then clad the house, with 50 mm battens and 10 mm cladding.

Can we use a 10 or 12 mm threaded stainless steel screw eye , resin set into the block work?

This would mean they can clad around the threaded portion after we have set them in place after which we can measure the eyelet positions accurately.

Many thanks

Hi Adrian

I think the best way to install this is with a dead fixing in the middle of the wall and a small rigging screw at each end to allow for minor adjustment on first installation. Once these two rigging screws have been set they can be locked off and are unlikely to need to be moved again. The sail can then be removed just by loosening a larger rigging screw at the mast or a winch at the mast.

I can offer this at two load ratings.

60mph – 2t webbing – £2063 delivered any colour in Soltis 86 with welded seams
40mph – 0.8t webbing - £1570 delivered any colour in Soltis 86 with welded seams

Prices are for the riggings screw set up, on the 40mph version you can add a winch to the mast location for an additional £138.

Lead time on both of these is 4-5 weeks from confirmation of survey dims

Fittings need to be installed prior to survey – all fittings are held in stock.

As a comparison the same sail in the infresco fabric 40mph rating on rigging screws would be £946.05 with a 2 week lead time.

In the high end shade cloth (monotec 370) the cost would be £1300 on rigging screws – all sewn - lead time 4-5 weeks.

Regards

Paul
